THE PIXIE FLYER

THE Pixenary Railroad Station was crowded. Everyone was there. It was a gala occasion. They were celebrating the new train, the Pixie Flyer, that had just been added to the railroad. Up until now, there had been only one toy train to take the Pixies through the woodlands—the Pixie Special. But now there were two, and their schedules had been very carefully planned.

The Pixie Flyer would start from one end of the railroad while the Pixie Special would start from the other end. They would meet at a certain point, midway in the forest. Then the Flyer would switch off to a separate set of tracks while the Special went steaming ahead. Time was of the essence. The trains had to be on schedule so that they would meet exactly where the tracks switched off.

The Flyer was not taking any passengers on this, its first trip. Mike and Joe Pixie, the driver and his assistant, were up front, and Pete Pixie, Honorary President, was the only one to go along. He was seated all alone in the smoking car, leaning out of the window to wave good-bye as the train finally rolled out of the station.

It wasn't until then that Tom, Dick and Harry turned around to realize that Aunt Polly was missing. In the excitement of watching the new train, they didn't even know when it was that Aunt Polly was no longer at their side. The alarm promptly went out in Pixenary and everyone came out to join in the search. No one mentioned anything, but they all had one thought in their minds and their hearts were heavy with fear.

And their suspicions were justified. In another part of the forest, there was a meeting with an entirely different aspect. The Insects were holding forth right near the railroad tracks, just before the important switch where the Special and the Flyer were to meet. And there, tied to the tracks, her mouth gagged, was poor Aunt Polly. Biff Insect was making a speech explaining that it was bad enough when the Pixies had one train, but now that they had two, something must be done to stop both of them.

The insects, of course, didn't realize that the Pixies had worked very hard to build the railroad and get the two trains, and that was why they had them. Biff and his gang were interested in one thing only. They were out to destroy the railroad, and if it meant endangering Polly's life to do this, they didn't care.

Biff knew that time was the important thing in the operation of the Pixie Railroad. He therefore determined to make the Flyer late. The Special would then come speeding ahead and would pass the switch-off before the Flyer reached it. The two trains would then meet at a point without a switch-off and they would collide. Both trains would be destroyed at once and that would be the end of the railroad.

Biff's ace in the hole, though, was the way he was going to delay the Flyer. It was poor Aunt Polly, tied to the tracks, that was going to do it. Mike, the driver of the Flyer, would see Aunt Polly tied to the tracks. He would stop the train to set her free. This would make the Flyer late and it would meet the Special then at a point where there was no switch-off. The two trains would crash together and that would be the end of them both. Of course the insects didn't care about Polly. If Mike didn't see her there, tied to the tracks, she would just be run over and they would have to think of another scheme.

Uncle Pete was relaxing on his seat in the Flyer, completely unaware of all these complications. Remember, he didn't even know that Polly was missing. Suddenly, the whistle of the train started shrieking through the woodlands. It was a danger signal, but the train didn't stop. Mike Pixie didn't want to miss that switch-off. They had not as yet come to the turn in the road where Polly would be visible.

But another band of Insects headed by Largo suddenly jumped on the train and were taking it over from Mike and Joe Pixie. They didn't know anything about Biff's Plans and had just decided to capture the train and take it over. They tossed Mike and Joe off the train and started running it themselves, not realizing that Pete Pixie was in the passenger car.

Luckily Mike had blown the whistle before he was thrown off, because Pete came up front to see what was happening. He looked out of the window and saw the train approaching Polly, tied to the tracks. Largo, of course, not knowing of Biff's plans, would never stop to set Polly free. He would just ride over her. Pete thought fast. It was something that only the Mighty Atom could possibly handle!

Off he went behind one of the little seats of the train and uttered the now famous words: "PICK A PECK O' PIXIES." A flash of lightning, a blast of thunder, and the Mighty Atom sailed forth from the train. There was no time to untie Polly; he would have to do something to stop the speeding train. The Mighty Atom, undaunted, swooped down on the tracks, just in front of Polly, and held his arms up high. The train was speeding along, but the Mighty Atom stood his ground right in front of the oncoming train. He didn't swerve an inch as the train came toward him. Would it run over first him and then Polly right behind him?

No. Largo, who was speeding ahead determined to run right over him, didn't count on the strength of the Mighty Atom, who didn't budge as the train approached him. He only held his arms high above his head. Closer and closer came the train. There it was now, right on top of him! It rode right up him, up his arms and then went hurtling into the river alongside the tracks. Polly Pixie was saved!

The insects were struggling out of the river when the Mighty Atom disappeared. He didn't even take time out to untie Polly. The Mighty Atom's work had been done. Pete Pixie could carry on from there. He hid behind a pebble and again uttered the magic words. A flash of lightning and the Mighty Atom was no more. It was Pete Pixie who stooped over Polly to untie her from the tracks.

"Oh, thank you Pete," she said when the gag was removed. "But it was really the Mighty Atom that saved my life, you know."

Pete smiled wisely, "I know it, but we have to hurry and get you off the tracks before the Special comes along."

It was just in time too, because no sooner had Pete and Polly reached the side of the road than the train came roaring by.

"Alas," sighed Polly, "we're back to one train again. The Flyer is lost."

"Not at all," said Pete. "That's why the Mighty Atom let it go into the river instead of hurling it to the ground. The water broke its fall. It will take us some time to get it out of the water, but it won't be hard to fix up after that. In the meantime, those insects, Largo and his friends, who took over the train, and Biff, who tied you to the tracks, didn't accomplish their mission. Some are struggling to get out of the water while the others' plans just fell through."

"When we get the Flyer going again," said Polly, "I'm going to take the first ride with you, Pete. Then maybe we won't have any trouble!"
